(The First Schedule -Testing)

TESTING

(See tection 31

1 - \ature of the Test apparatus

He apparatus consists of the following parts -

- (1) the oil cup.
- (2) the cover with side test lamp and clockwork arrangement for opening and closing the holes in the cover and for dipping the test flame,
- (3) the water lath or heating vessel,
- (4) the tripod stand with jacket and si rit lamp for heating the water bath,
- (5) the thermometer for indicating the temperature of the oil in the oil-cup;
- (6) the thermometer for indicating the temperature of the water in the water-
- (7) the thermometer for indicating the temperature of the oil before it is posted into the oil cup,
- (8) the dropping bottle or pipette for replenishing the test lamp, and
- (9) a barometer standardised at the Meteorological Office of the Province of at my other place appointed by the Local Government

The oil cup is a cylindrical flat bottomed vestel made of gun metal or brass and tinned or slvered insile \(\bar{V}_{\text{surge}}\) is fixel to the inside of the cup to regulate the height to which it is to be filled with the sample under examination

The cup is provided with a closefting overlapping cover which carries the thermometer, the test lamp and the adjuncts thereto. The test lamp is suspended upon two supports by means of truminous which allow it to be easily inclined to a particular inale and restored to its original position. The socket in the cover, which is to hold a round built thermometer for irdicating the temperature of the oil during the testing operation is so adjusted that the bulk of the latter is always inserted in a definite position below the surface of the highed

The cover is provided with three holes one in the centre art two smaller ones close to the sides. These are closed and opened by means of a provided slide. When the shife is wowed so as to uncover the holes the suspended lymp is caught by a projection fixed on the slide and tilted in such a way as to bring the end of the spont just below the surface of the hild. As the shife moves back so is to cover the holes the lump returns to its original position. Upon the over in front of and in a line with the nextle of the lump is fixed a white lead the diumeter of which represents the are of the test flame to be used.

The water lath or heating vessel is so constructed that when the oil-cup is placed in position in it an air space or air-chainle intervenes between ite two consequently, in applying the test under ordinary circumstances the leat in transmitted grafially to the oil from the hot water through the air space. The water bith is fitted with a socket for receiving a long built thermometer to indicate the temperature of the water. It is also provided with a function overflow pipe and two landles.

The water-bath rests upon a triped stand, which is fitted with a copper cylir her critacket, so that ite bath is curron led to an enclosed air space which retains and requisites the lest. One of the legal of the vitand serves as a support for a spirit lamp, which is attached to it by a small swing bracket.

The elockwors arrangement by which during the operation of testing the shifts in withfirst in all the test thane disperd into the cup and raised again as the office is replaced in provide with a practic key for setting it in action for each test, and with a trianger for starting it each time that the test flame is applied.

(The First Schedule.—Testing.)

[1899: Act VIII.

II.—Directions for drawing the Sample and preparing it for testing.

cawing the sample.—In all cases the testing officer or some person duly 1. Drawing authorised by him shall personally superintend the drawing of the sample from an original unopened tin or other vessel.

An opening sufficiently large to admit of the oil being rapidly poured or cyphoned from the tin or other vessel shall be made.

Two bottles, each of the capacity of about forty fluid ounces, are to be filled with the oil. One of these, the contents of which is intended to be preserved for reference in case of need, is to be carefully corked, the cork being well driven home, cut off lavel with the neek, and melted scaling-wax worked into it. The other bottle may be either stoppered or corked.

- 2. Preparing the sample for testing .- About ten fluid ounces of the oil, sufficient for three tests, are transferred from the bottle into which the sample has been drawn to a pint flask or bottle, which is to be immersed in water artificially cooled until a thermometer, introduced into the oil, indicates a temperature not exceeding 500 Fahrenheit.
- 1[3. Samples of certain mixtures.—Samples of liquid and viscous and sedimentary petroleum mixtures shall be prepared for testing in the manner prescribed by the two foregoing directions.]

III .- Directions for preparing and using the Test-apparatus.

- 1. Preparing the water-bath.—The water-bath is filled by pouring water into the funnel until it begins to flow out at the overflow-pipe. The temperature of the water at the commencement of each test, as indicated by the long bulb thermometer, is to be 1300 Fahrenheit, and this is attained in the first instance by mixing hot and cold water, either in the bath or in a vessel from which the bath is filled, until the thermometer which is provided for testing the temperature of the water gives the proper indication; or the water is heated by means of the spirit-lamp (which is attached to the stand of the apparatus) until the required temperature is indicated.
- 2. Preparing the test-lamp.—The test-lamp is fitted with a piece of cylindrical wick of such thickness that it fills the wick-holder, but may readily be moved to and fro for the purpose of adjusting the size of the flame. In the body of the lamp, upon the wick, which is coiled within it, is placed a small tuft of cotton wool, moistened with petroleum, any oil not absorbed by the wool being removed. When the lamp has been lighted the wick is adjusted by means of a pair of forceps until the flame is of the size of the bead fixed on the cover of the oil-cup; should a particular test occupy so long a time that the flame begins to get smaller, through the supply of oil in the lamp becoming exhausted, three or four drops of petroleum are allowed to fall upon the tuft of wool in the lamp from the dropping bottle or pipette provided for that purpose. This can be safely done without interrupting the test.
- 3. Filling the oil-cup.—The oil-cup having been previously cooled, by placing it bottom downwards in water at a temperature not exceeding 500 Fahrenheit, is to be rapidly wiped dry, placed on a level surface in a good light, and the oil to be tested is poured in very slowly, without splashing, until its surface is level with the point of the gauge which is fixed in the cup. The round bulb thermometer is inserted into the lid of the cup, care being taken that the projecting rim of the collar touches the edge of the socket; the test-lamp, prepared as already described, is placed in position, and the cover is then put on the cup and pressed down so that its edge rests on the rim of the cup.
- 4. Application of the test.—The water-bath, with its thermometer in position, is placed in some locality where it is not exposed to currents of air, and where the light is sufficiently subdued to admit of the size of the entire test-flame being compared with that of the bead on the cover. The cup is carefully lifted without shaking it, and placed in the bath, the test-lamp is lighted, and the clockwork wound up by turning the key. The thermometer in the oil-cup is now watched, and, when the temperature has reached 560 Fahrenheit, the clockwork is set in motion by pressing the trigger.

¹ This item was added by Notification No. 3901-6, dated 27th May 1911, see Gazette of India. 1911, Part I, p. 368.

(The First Schedule -Testing)

If no flash takes place, the clockwork is at once rewound and the trigger pressed at 50 Fehrenheit, and so on, at overy degree rise of temperature until the flash occurs, or until a temperature of 95° Fahrenheit has been reached.

If the flash takes place at any temperature below 700 l'abrenheit, the temperature at which it occurs is to be recorded. Two fresh portions of the sample are than to be successively tested in a similar manner and the results recorded. It no greater difference than 20 l'abrenheit exists between any two of the three recorded results, and if in on instance the flash has taken place within eight degrees of the temperature at which the testing is commenced, each result is to be corrected for atmospheric pressure as hereafter described and the average of the three corrected results is the flishing point of the sample. In the event of there being a greater difference than 20 hairenheit between any two of the results while in no instance has the flash taken place within eight degrees of the temperature at which the testing was commenced, the series of tests is to be rejected and a fresh series of tires similarly obtained, and so on, until a sufficiently concordant series is furnished when the results are to be corrected and the average taken in the manner already described.

If, however, a flash has occurred at or below 60° when the test is applied in the manner above described, the next testing shall be commenced ten degrees lower than the temperature at which the flash had been previously obtained that is to say, at 54° or thereunder), and this procedure shall be continued until the results of three consecutive tests do not show a greater difference than 2° and until a flash has not occurred in any of the three tests within eight degrees of the temperature at which the testing is commenced Provided always that if at the commencement of the series of tests a flash has occurred on the first application of the test flame at 50° and if a flash mas also occurred on the first application of the test flame at 50° and the flame is first applied at 46° as above directed, the testing officer shall certify that the petroleum has a flashing point below 47°, and the sample shall be reported dangerous

If a temperature of 760 Fahrenheit has been reached without a flash occurring, the application of the test-flume is to be continued at every degree rise of temperature until a temperature of 95° Fahrenheit has been reached. If no flash has occurred up to this point, and if the petroleum is declared to be imported subject to the provisions of the Act, the tests shall not be continued, and the testing officer shall certify that the petroleum has a flashing point over 95° and is not dangerous. But if the petroleum is soil ordinarily used for lubricating purposes and is declared to I avo its flashing point at or above 200° or is oil to which a notification of the Local Government exempting it from the operation of the ket will be applicable in the event of the flashing point being found to be at or above 120° the test shall be continued as follows—The oil cup is to be removed from the water lath and the temperature of the water in the water lath and the spir than chainler is then to be filled to a depth of 1½ inches with water at a temperature of about 25° latherheit, the ol cup is to be riplaced in the water bath and the spir thanp attached to the water lath is to be lighted and pheed undermath. The test flame is then to be again applied from 96° ol abritablett, at every degree rise of temperature is indicated by the thermometer in the oil cup until a flash takes place or until a temperature of 200° Fahrenheit or 120° Fahrenheit or 120° Fahrenheit or lease the value of the prescribed at 2 without interrupting the test.

If a flash occurs at any temperature between 76° and 200° University, the temperature at which it occurs, subject to correct n for atmospheric pressure, is the flashing point of the sample

In repeating a test a fresh sample of oil must always be used, the fested sample being thrown any, and the cup must be wavel dry from any addering oil and cooled, as already described, before receiving to fresh sample.

S. Correction for atmospheric pressure—As the Bashing point of an oil is influented by changes in atmospheric pressure to an average extent of 160 Falternleit for every inch of the barometer, a correction of it eld servel flashing point may been menced any. The height of the barometer must therefore be determined at the time of making this test for the flashing point. The time legal to the largement of the purpose of the test shall be considered to be the legal to the column of mercury incapance of the

Fahrenheit, which is supported by the air pressure at the time of the experiment; that is, the actual height of the barometer at the time of observation duly corrected for any error of the instrument and for its temperature if necessary. For the purpose of applying the correction to the flashing point of the oil obtained by the test, a table is appended to this schedule giving the flashing point of oils ranging from 650 to 800. Fahrenheit, under presure ranging from 27 to 31 inches of mercury.

The table is used in the following manner:-

Example.—An oil has given a flashing point of 710, the barometer being at 28.6 inches; take the nearest number to 710 in the vertical column headed 28.6. This number is 70.8. Substitute for this the number in the same horizontal line in the column headed 50 (the normal height of the barometer). The substituted number, that is, the true flashing point of the oil, is 73°.

2 [Directions for testing petroleum mixtures.

- 6. Liquid mixture .-- Where the petroleum mixture is wholly liquid, flows quite freely, and does not contain any sediment or thickening ingredient, such mixture is tested in the same manner as ordinary petroleum.
- 7. Viscous and sedimentary mixtures.—Where the petroleum mixture contains an undissolved sediment, as in the case of some metal polishes which can be separated by filtration or by settlement and decantation, the sediment may be so separated and the decanted liquid may be tested in the same manner as ordinary petroleum.

In carrying out such separation, care must be taken to minimise the evaporation of the petroleum. The separation of the sediment must not be effected by distillation,

Where the petroleum mixture is such that sediment cannot be separated by the aforementioned means, or where it is of a viscous nature as in the case of india-rubber solution, quick drying paints, etc., such mixture shall be tested in a modified apparatus, which differs from that prescribed in Part I only in the addition of a stirrer to equalise the temperature throughout the sample under test.

In carrying out the test of a viscous petroleum mixture this stirrer shall be constantly revolved at a slow speed, except when applying the test flame with the fingers, the direction of revolution being that of the hand of a clock.

With the exception of the use of the stirrer, the manner of carrying out the test shall be the same as in the case of ordinary petroleum.

The stirrer may be removed by grasping the spindle just above the blades with the finger and thumb, and unscrewing the upper sheath. The opening in the lid, through which the stirrer passes, may then be closed by a plug provided for the purpose.
